Whether it's wind, hail, frost, drought or any other nasty that Mother Nature throws at you, the resulting crop damage can cause a huge financial blow. Sure, it's almost impossible to predict these catastrophic weather events, but you can reduce your exposure with a bit of forward planning – and by keeping an eye on weather forecasts.

And to back up your efforts (and help reduce the financial impacts of serious weather events), we offer a range of policies to cover things like hail or frost damage to maize, barley, wheat, fodder crops, seed crops and vegetables.

It's what we call active insurance because, after 100 years of experience with these things, we reckon preventing a problem is just as smart as insuring against it. You could say combining forces is the best way to beat the weather!
